Excerpt: . . . in relation to the origin of living beings, and even we cannot positively deny that life connected with some form was not co-eternal with time, space, and matter, and that all living beings have not successively and divergently ascended from the lowest types. (Description of Remain of Extinct Mammalia. Journal Acad. Nat. Sciences, N. ! , iii. 167.) 8. That each well-marked cranial type admits of certain variations in its individual characters, which variations constitute divergent forms. 9. That these divergent forms must not be confounded with hybrid types. Both, it is true, are produced by modifications in the mode of action of the developing principle; in the former, however, these modifications depend upon climatic conditions, in the latter they result from race-amalgamation. 10. That reasons exist for considering some, at least, of the socalled artificial deformations as strictly natural types, representing very early humanitarian epochs. 11. That a regular system of gradation Beems to underlie and harmonize the various cranial forms of the human family. 12. That these forms appear to be pre-represented or anticipated in the various types of skull exhibited by different genera and species of monkeys. 13. That if we regard artificial deformations as the forced imitations of once natural types, and upon this ground admit them in our systems of classification, as some writers have done, then the perplexing gaps which seem to break the animal chain by disparting man and monkeys--the group which stands nearest to man--will...
