[...]of the palace were filled by men, women, and children-some bringing leathern doublets of every cut and colour, some with tales of what they had heard and seen in their walks round about the palace. So much news about all sorts of great people came out of these stories, that lords and ladies ran to complain of Spare as one who spoke against people. His Majesty, being now sure that there was no example in all the palace records of such a retainer, sent forth a decree sending the cobbler away for ever from the Court, and giving all his goods to the page Tinseltoes. That royal decree was hardly issued before the page had taken for himself Spare s rich room, his costly garments, and all the presents the people at Court[.].
