Excerpt: . of Commerce; and farmers organized Agricultural Associations. Japanese Associations are organized in almost every place where Japanese are to be found in groups in order to promote their general welfare. Schools for children are established throughout the country. The Christian churches and missions faced a. great change in the condition of the Japanese so that their work had to be altered accordingly. In the changed condition of the Japanese in this-country, as I have already mentioned, Christianity had to strive for two aspects of efficiency: first, efficient effort for the salvation of individual souls, and the second, efficient social service to meet the present conditions. In 1911, The Dendo-Dan, the Japanese Interdenominational Board of Missions, was organized. Its mission was to meet these new demands, and its work was in the first place to send evangelists to-every nook and corner on the Pacific Coast, in order to propagate the Gospel among the scattered population; and in the second place, it was designed to bring into more compact cooperation all the denominations; and in the third place, its purpose was to promote more efficient social service for the Japanese. At every annual meeting and every directors meeting social problems were discussed, and a committee was appointed in order to carry out plans for all the departments of social welfare, such as institutions for children, Y. W. C. A., Y. M. C. A., etc. In 1912 a Japanese Y. W. C. A. was organized...
