Not illustrated. 1867 Excerpt: .the different ingredients and elements necessary to the building of a community, and reason is the cement prepared to keep the building together after it is reared; but I have been drawing attention to the fact, that the efforts of impostors to quench and prevent the use of reason, have hitherto been too successful in the accomplishment of their purpose. To this success must be attributed the present degraded condition of the world; men s ignorance of, and indifference to those things immediately affecting their wellbeing, and even their lives. A community, then, is like a structure made up of many ingredients, and when all the necessary ingredients are present, the use of money in the production of wealth is not required; the conditions under which this can be done are self-evident, being a combination of the different kinds of labor, with access to the raw material without charge. The United States, then, offers free access to the raw material, and there is nothing to prevent the laboring millions of the Old World from combining and applying their labor, so as to enable them to produce wealth independent of employers and capital; the wheat, the oats, and the barley grow, not because the owner is a rich man, but, because the seed is put in the earth, and the rich man s riches as well as the poor man s poverty are, in consequence of the poor man getting in the form of wages for the...
